SPIE Optical Engineering + Applications, part of SPIE

The strain field transferred from the structure to the optical fiber sensor generates changes in the characteristics of the light signal transmitted by the glass core of the optical fiber.

Applications of fiber optic sensors in civil engineering ingly well, and I have thoroughly enjoyed the practice of optical engi-neering and the people associated with it for over five and a half decades. Interestingly enough, in that period, the basics of optical engineering have changed very little, although the applications of optics have undergone rapid, extensive, dynamic, and fascinating changes.
